AVOID THESE COMMON FACEBOOK MARKETPLACE SCAMS

Folks of all ages are turning to Facebook Marketplace to get rid of old items or make some extra money by reaching a much larger audience than they would through a yard sale. In addition to providing this convenience, however; Facebook Marketplace has become a breeding ground for scams. In fact, research shows 17% of all users have been victims of scams since the platform's inception in 2016.

If you're looking to make some cash on Facebook, be sure to spot and avoid these common scams:

Someone sends you an overpayment: Someone may send you an overpayment in the form of a check or a payment-app transaction. They'll then ask you for a refund of the overage. Typically, the check will bounce or the app payment will have been made with a stolen credit card and the charge will be disputed.

"Prove you're real": An interested buyer may ask you to send them a code to prove your identity. This could be an authorization code that will allow them to hijack one of your accounts, or, oftentimes, it's a Google Voice number that will allow them to run even more scams with your personal phone number.

Fake rentals: Lots of scammers have turned to creating fake listings for rental properties. This is because applications will request tons of personal information scammers can use to steal your identity. If you see a rental property you're interested in, always contact the property manager outside of Facebook.

Through financial literacy, we seek to empower our members to make informed financial decisions and spot fraud before they become victims. That's why we've partnered with Zogo, the next-gen financial education solution to make financial education available to all. If you don't have it downloaded already, go to the app and check out over 900 financial modules to start learning today! Don't forget to use promo code FPCCFCU.
